Sirs,

I do not know how to contact Peter Robinson, so perhaps you will pass this on.

Pensioner, single, 64. (Although how the government defines a 'pensioner' is laughable.)

No more money now than at age 70, so why should you consider that I can pay the same in rates as my neighbours who both work?

I am faced with rising household bills - heating, electricity, food, but no raise in my pension to even come near coping.

Why no discount for me, and many others?

And do not tell me to apply for 'Benefits' - I do not qualify because I worked all my life.

(Don't suppose this will ever get to Mr. Robinson. (How can mere mortals email him, and other MLA's direct???)
